GRADUATE.

“DEAR THE SCHOOLBOY SPOT,
WE NE’ER FORGET, THOUGH THERE WE ARE FORGOT.”

BYRON.

ALMA MATER.

“MEN MAY COME AND MEN MAY GO,
BUT I ROLL ON FOREVER.”

OLD SONG.

“It may be, in later years,
When fast declining down the vale of tears,
Each heart, in seeking to forget its age,
Turns trembling backward to life's college page.”

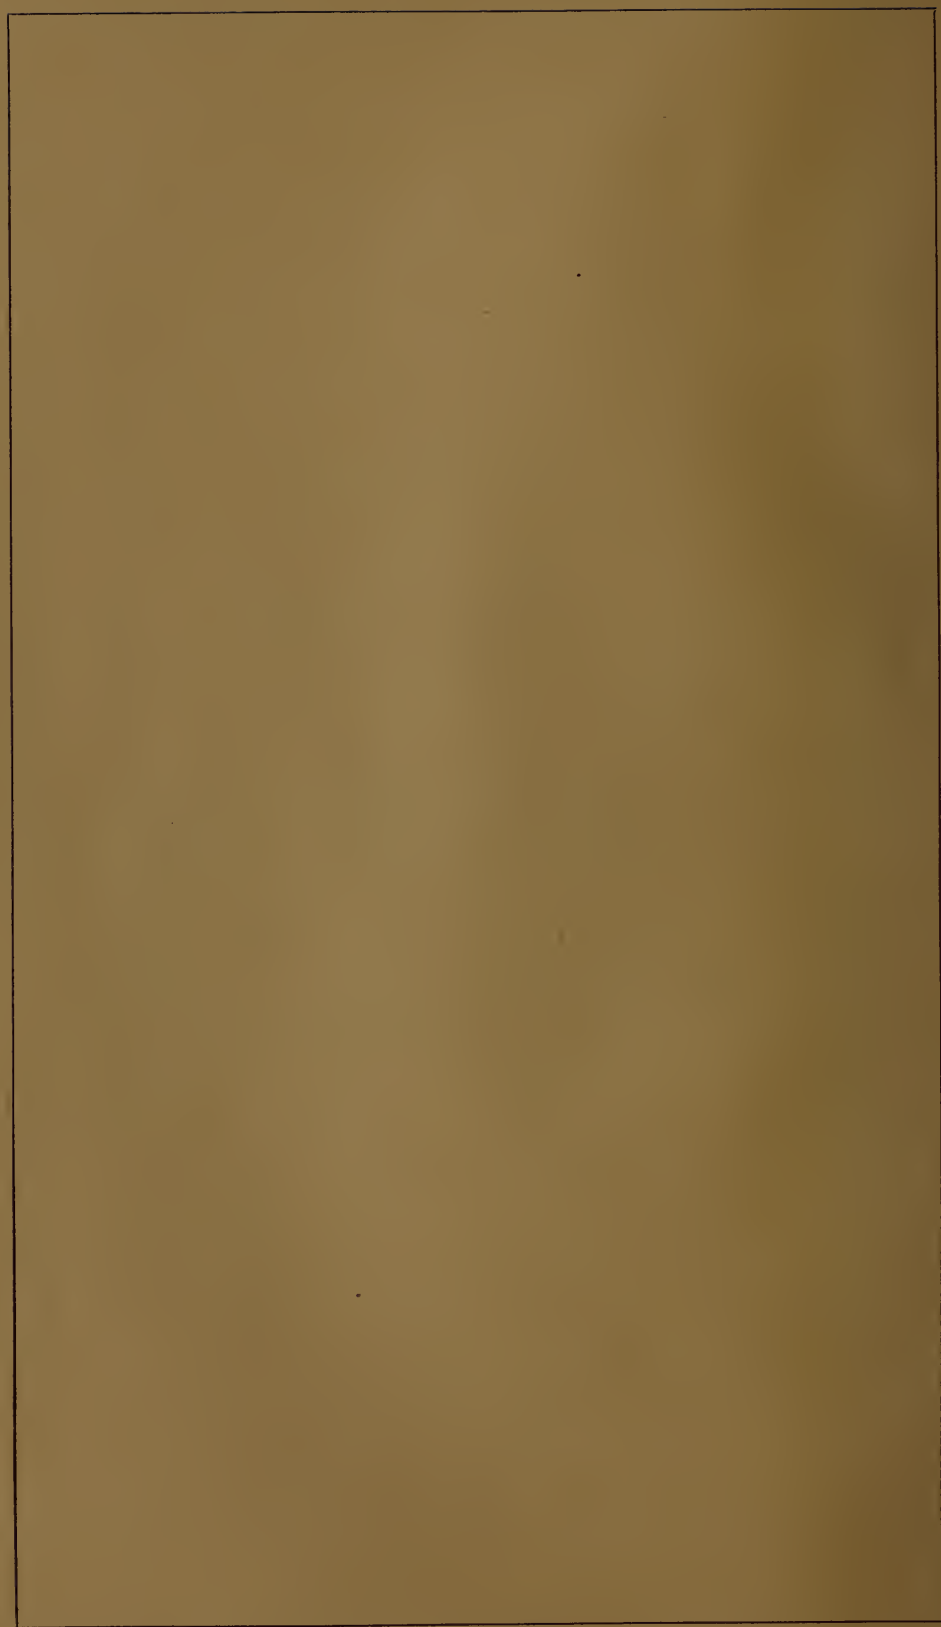

Sedgwick's Class Poem, 1843.

“God grant that we may never be so hardened by the cares and anxieties of life that we shall be obliged to confess that our college friendships and our youthful affections were but idle fancies and romantic dreams.”—Sprague's Class Oration, 1843.

“I envy not the man who, after leaving his Alma Mater, can look back with a cold and vacant indifference to the years he has passed under her beneficent guardianship, or who does not grasp the hand of a classmate, however long the separation and in whatever clime, with an emotion which he can feel but not describe.”—President Sparks' Inaugural.

UNDERGRADUATE MEMORANDA.

Of the seventy-seven students who commenced their college course together in the Freshmen Class of 1839-'40, one after another dropped out, from time to time, until there were twenty-two of them who failed to come in at the end of the race.

One only died during the course. JOHN ABBOT EMERY died at Exeter, N. H., in the senior year, Oct. 25, 1842. He was buried in Springfield, Mass., where his relatives erected a monument over his remains. His classmates also erected a monument to his memory at Mount Auburn Cemetery, in Cambridge.

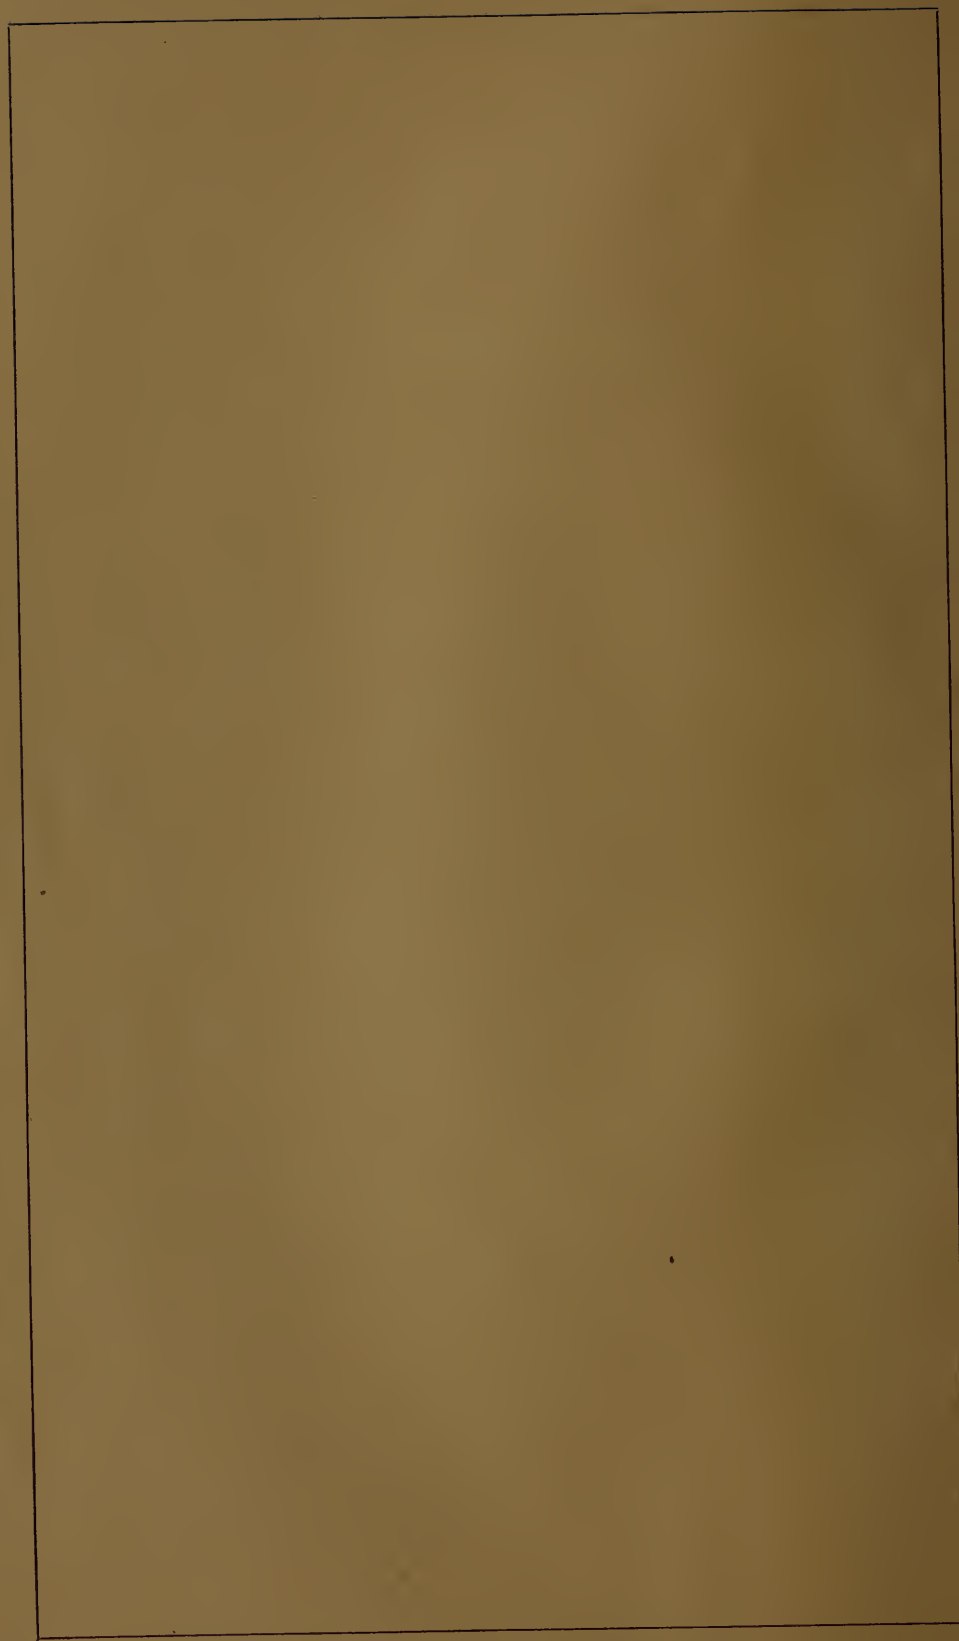

Four fell back into the class below and graduated in 1841. One other took a medical degree at the college in 1846.

A few settled in the vicinity of the college, and have to some extent kept up their acquaintance with their old classmates.

One recently committed suicide after he had attained the age of fifty-eight years.

The remainder have disappeared from our observation among the mass of mankind.

Of the fourteen recruits who joined the class after the Freshman year, all went through except one. He having been too prominent in a little scholastic unpleasantness was kindly permitted by the Faculty to leave the college in the senior year in advance of his class, never to return, much to the regret of his classmates. He has since died, mourned in death as he was beloved in life.

Senior's Class Song,

1843.

I.

WE 've met to-night, a happy band,
Around the festive board,
To grasp once more a classmate's hand,
And speak a friendly word :
Then banish care from every heart.
Let mirth and joy abound,
While sparkling wit inspires the toast,
And merry songs go round.

II.

Mid pleasure's sunny bowers we'll roam,
Ere youth begins to wane ;
For life's short spring, once past and gone,
Can ne'er return again :
Then pluck its flowers while they bloom,
And rosy wreaths entwine
For friendship, love, and social mirth,—
Bright spells of auld lang syne.

III.

We'll pledge to friends we hold most dear,
To her each loves the best ;
Joy's brightest beams shine round their path,
And all their hopes be blest.
Then fill the goblet to the brim,
With nectar all divine,
We'll pledge to love that knows no change,
And days of auld lang syne.

IV.

Though fate compels us leave these scenes,—
Perhaps, for aye to part.—
She ne'er can break the golden chains
Love twines around each heart.

And whatsoe'er our lot may be.
 Whatever star may shine,
 Fond memory still shall linger round
 The days of auld lang syne.

V.

Then here's a hand, my trusty fier
 And gie's hand o'thine ;
 And we'll tak a right guid willie wought
 For auld lang syne.
 For auld lang syne, my dear,
 For auld lang syne,
 We'll tak a cup of kindness yet,
 For auld lang syne.

Ode,

Twenty Years After Graduation.

1863.

WE meet to-night as last we met,
 With Harvard's light aglow,—
 The rosy light is shining yet
 Of twenty years ago!

The dust we've gathered on our feet
 In life's mysterious round,
 We shake it off! for where we meet
 God makes a holy ground!

The wonted tones, from heart to heart,
 Like echoes spring to-night,
 The touch that healed the boyish smart,
 Brings back the old delight.

Our locks, 'tis true, of gold or jet,
 Are glimmering into gray ;
 The pulse that used to bound and fret,
 Is tiring of its play.

With traitor touch old Time has traced
Upon each Brother's brow,
The steps his heart once weary paced
Or lightly dances now.

He sets our deffest wiles at naught,
But one blow aims in vain ;
The links our boyish hearts have wrought,
Our manly love still chain.

By angel art in Heaven wove,
Let down by angel hand,
Hides for a space, a veil of love
Some dear ones of our band.

Among them he whose life, how dear !
Was to his country given,
Whose laurel, hardly gathered here,
An amaranth bloomed in Heaven.

Yet, through this veil their forms appear !
They stand by us to-day !
Their touch we feel, their voices hear,
Inspire us on our way !

But ere its misty folds arise,
While love divine still stays
Our steps from that bright Paradise,
Now shimmering through its haze,

May He, whose word our threads of life
In silver cords doth blend,
Those silver cords, by ties of love,
Draw closer to the end !

—SEDGWICK.

Ode for Class Dinner,

JUNE 27, 1883.

We met in Academus' grove ;
The flowers were wet with early dew ;
The affluent morning, from her stores,
Shed, o'er each scene, a roseate hue.

The birds poured out their sweetest notes,
The air was tremulous with song ;
Our hearts responded to their strains,
And gladly would the hour prolong.

Yet, in the horizon, rose the peaks
Of science, art, and noble fame ;
With high ambition forth we went,
With firm resolve, and worthy aim.

The day wore on ; our paths diverged ;
Then heat, and storm, and dangers rose ;
Some conquered, but, alas ! some fell ;
Yet with their faces toward their foes.

Again we meet ; the westering sun
Declares the noonday past for all ;
Soon shall the deepening shades of night,
Around our every pathway fall.

Yet, ere they fall, may evening skies,
Aglow with golden splendor bright,
Be pledge of an immortal day,
Refulgent with eternal light.

No paths divergent turned our hearts ;
Nor storm, nor danger, chilled our love ;
Well said Saint Paul, love never fails ;
On earth below, in heaven above.

—HILL.

Song for Class Dinner,

JUNE 27, 1883.

Let fleeting seasons come and go,
Let years as swiftly flee ;
But friendship's bond remains as firm
As bound in forty-three.

For old forty-three, my dear, for old '43,
We'll take a cup o' kindness yet, for old '43.

Our fate may lead us East or West,
O'er many a land and sea ;
Our hearts remain at Harvard still,
With the boys of forty-three.

For old forty-three, &c.

New loves, 'tis true, may fill our hearts,
New joys our portion be ;
They do not chill our love and pride
In the class of forty-three.

For old forty-three, &c.

Though rolling decades thin our ranks,
With warmer friendship we,
While tender memories fill our hearts,
Still cling to forty-three.

For old forty three, &c.

—HILL.
